

About how many jelly beans do you see? 20? 100? 1,000?

Easy right? Not always. Many people would be able to guess about the right amount, but for students struggling with math learning disabilities, the answer might not come quickly—or at all.

The FAM tells you WHY a student struggles in math so you can determine HOW to intervene

- Isolates, measures, and quantifies various subtypes of dyscalculia.
- Identifies students' math strengths and weaknesses.
- Includes 19 subtests that make up three indexes (Verbal, Procedural, and Semantic).
- The FAM Screening Form includes three subtests—one from each index—and is designed to identify children at risk for dyscalculia or math learning disability within an RTI delivery system model.
- Standardized on a sample of 1,061 examinees in prekindergarten to college drawn from more than 30 states and based on 2013 U.S. Census statistics.
- Offers grade-based normative data (with age proxies provided); age and grade equivalents and percentiles for subtest scores; and confidence intervals, percentile ranks, z scores, and normal curve equivalents for index scores.
- Includes clinical samples of more than 120 students with learning disabilities, ADHD, and intellectual developmental disorder.
